

FIG. 45.—Superimposed outlines of three X-ray photographs taken at intervals during phosgene poisoning to show changes in shape of the heart. The solid line indicates the normal. The dotted line shows the right-sided dilatation 39 minutes after gassing. The broken line is from a photograph taken 11 hours and 53 minutes after exposure to the gas. The heart had then become pendular in shape and much reduced in size