

FIG. 9.—Thomas traction arm splint applied to obtain traction on the lower fragment and at the same time to allow flexion of elbow. This position is sometimes necessary with fracture of the lower third of the humerus. Traction by adhesive plaster to the skin is preferred, but because of the nature of the wound this may not be possible.