

FIG. 27.—Position for fracture of neck of femur or fracture into the trochanter. Only such traction as is required to steady the leg should be used, since the crowding of the bones together in this position is desired. Because of the extensive character and location of the wounds the use of the Thomas splint is often not possible, and under such conditions the Hedges splint straightened at the knee should be used.